Description: This database is a collection of middle school, junior high, high school, and college yearbooks from across the United States. While yearbooks may not provide information about the vital events that are usually associated with genealogical research, they do provide other information about individuals' lives. This information helps place people in historical context as well as provides detail that helps turn individuals, sometimes only known by names and dates, into actual people.

Stories of prosperous farms, huge rose-growing greenhouses, and times enjoyed in simple, bucolic settings make up the township's history in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Chatham Township is an embodiment of these historical stories and images. There was a time when the marshes of the Great Swamp were hunting grounds for huckleberries, when a Noe family horse pulled milk carts through the streets, and even, it was whispered, when the massive, three-story, Greek Revival Boisaubin mansion was used as a stop along the Underground Railroad. One of the most notable stories is of a lady known as Madame Bey, who opened a camp for prizefighters, making Chatham Township a sports page dateline known throughout the country.

Seven A COMMUNAL EXPERIENCE

Shortly after World War I, a small group of Jewish immigrants living in New York City dreamed of an experiment in communal living. They hoped to get back to nature living outside of the city and were eager to obtain better education for their children. Most wanted to continue working in New York and needed a railroad to carry them into the city. In 1922, they chose about 100 heavily wooded acres in the Floral Hill section of Chatham Township, close to the Chatham Borough line and running north along Lafayette Avenue to just beyond Southern Boulevard. They divided the property by lot, as could be expected in an idealistic colony. Most members were highly educated, but the group included all walks of life: teachers, artists, newspaper editors, a real estate broker, several tailors, a movie producer, a printer, and a few musicians. Some descendants of the founders still live there, but nearly all original houses have been much remodeled or replaced. Louis Thorner (right), one of the founders of the Colony Association, bought two acres in 1922. He was a tailor by trade but planted an orchard and raised vegetables and fruit for sale at his property.

This is the simple house that Louis Thorner built. The vegetables and fruit that he produced in his small orchard and large garden were sold from a stand in front of his property. His daughter, Blanche Thorner Blumenfeld, tore down the small original house and built a new home at the site, 12 Maple Street.

The association set aside five acres of land at the corner of School Avenue and Spring Street for a school and social center. The school was never built, but the social center has survived as Colony Pool. Nearly all children attended classes in the Red Brick School until 1929, when Southern Boulevard School was opened. Bernard Sommer bought the three-story mansion above, at 269 Lafayette Avenue, and conducted a private school there until the Great Depression ended his venture. In local lore, the school became known as the Big Mistake.

Chatham Township By John T. Cunningham, Arcadia Publishing, 2001

On May 26, 1986, the Chatham Township Historical Society hosted a panel to discuss the colony's history. Shown from left to right, panelists Florence Robbins Stea, Goldie Chibka, Esther Thorner Hirshfield, and Jennie Switzen talked of the pleasant surprise early colonists had when surrounding neighbors were friendly. They talked of education, the pond, the Samovar Tea House, the sales of lots, and many other things that formed a lasting colony in the township.

When Louis Thorner's wife, Clara Morrison Thorner, refused to live in a tent, he came out from New York on weekends and built a two-room house. They later added two rooms and a porch on ground level and, as the years passed, built upstairs rooms and an interior stairway. Finally, Clara was able to relax in a deck chair with her cat, leading a simpler, easier life.
